The city, which was recaptured by Ukrainian forces from Russian invaders in November 2022, has now become a shocking testament to the brutality of the atrocities that were committed.

"These crimes are part of the Kremlin's wider pursuit of a criminal plan to extinguish Ukrainian identity, seemingly by any means necessary" said Wayne Jordash KC, a Ukrainian war crimes specialist and managing partner at Global Rights Compliance.

The revelations come as part of Global Rights Compliance’s Mobile Justice Team, a group of legal experts on the ground in Ukraine, are assisting in the gathering of evidence of war crimes.

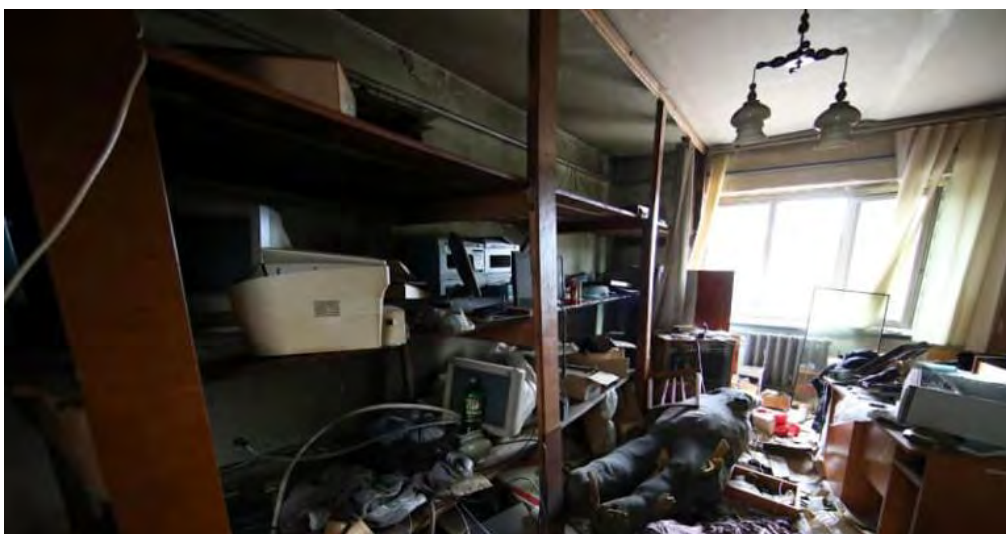

The team is investigating two main things, the “abduction of children and the destruction of civilian infrastructure.” Jordash added that Russia had been deploying tactics to instill Russian values in local populations in order to establish control.

“They then focus on detaining, torturing and killing any Ukrainian that might pose a threat to this plan, including local leaders, journalists, human rights activists, volunteers,” he said.

Though it may be tough to believe, the situation is far worse than it seems. Traces of torture and abuse were found littered around the city, leading to the investigation of many potential “torture chambers” run by the Russian Federal Security Services (FSB), the Kherson FSB and the Russian Prison Service.

More than 1,000 torture victims have reported similar experiences of physical beatings, sexual violence, electric shock torture and waterboarding. Evidence also suggests that prisoners were forced to learn and recite pro-Russian slogans, poems and songs, creating a form of 'brainwashing'.

And more than 400 civilians are reported to have vanished from Kherson, leaving their fate unknown.

"It is more Orwellian than Orwell's famous 1984 novel," said Jordash, who describes the torture chambers as the "tip of the iceberg" in relation to the Kremlin's goal of eliminating and destroying Ukrainian identity.

With investigations already underway, Jordash believes this is just the start of a long and difficult journey for the victims of Russian brutality.

"These types of war crimes, he said "cry out for justice", and all parties involved can only hope that one day, those guilty of these heinous acts may be brought to justice.
